

A PROPOSAL FOR PRI AND DEB

Where deprisbeauty.com is today, and where it could go.

The products, the prices, the warehouse in Cheyenne and your WooCommerce back office all stay. What changes is how a visitor feels in the first ten seconds, how much the site does for them after that, and how much of each visit turns into a sale, a sign-up or a referral.

Prepared for the Depris Beauty team 11 October 2026 · proposal draft

Screenshots and measurements taken the same day, in the same browser

The short version

Five things to know before you scroll

- 1 The current site works. It sells real products and ships same day. The proposal keeps all of that and builds on it rather than replacing it.
- 2 The new design opens on the women the products are for: six faces, 33 to 42, each with her concern and her ritual, instead of a logo banner and a search box.
- 3 Pages are far lighter. The home page downloads about one fifth of the data and runs about one fifth of the scripts. On a phone that is the difference between a visitor staying and leaving.
- 4 The site starts to work for the customer: a shelf that remembers them, six guides, an FAQ, a community, reviews on every product and a monthly newsletter.
- 5 Everything here is already built and clickable, not a mock-up. The preview took the same approach we would take on the real build, so the risk and the timeline are known.

What stays exactly the same

This is a redesign, not a new business. These pieces carry straight across.

KEPT	HOW
Your products and prices	Pulled live from the WooCommerce store. The preview carries one real product from each of the 15 categories; the full 145 import with one command.
Your product photos	Served from deprisbeauty.com as they are today.
Your logo and name	The real lock-up sits centred in the header. The colours of the whole site are taken from it.
Your customer reviews	The four verified reviews on the store appear on the new site and link back to it.
Your promises	Authorized retailer, sourced in Korea, stocked in the US, same-day dispatch before 3pm Mountain Time.

The first screen

TODAY

The hero is the logo again. A visitor sees the brand name three times before any product.

Search box first. That asks the visitor to already know what they want.

Category tiles use stock-style faces, so the page could belong to any skincare shop.

PROPOSED

A woman, not a bottle. Mira, 38, and her line about peptide nights. Six faces to switch between, each with her concern.

One headline, two buttons. Build a routine in 60 seconds, or shop the signature, which now sits small beside the words.

Trust up front. Authorized retailer, stocked in the US, cruelty-free, before the first scroll.

On a phone

Most skincare shopping happens on a phone, often in the evening. This is the same two pages at phone width.

TODAY

A newsletter pop-up covers the page the moment it loads, before the visitor has seen a product.

The banner, the search box and a paragraph fill the first screen. The first product is two screens down.

PROPOSED

Headline, promise, two buttons, then her. The portrait and the six faces follow on the next swipe.

No pop-up. The newsletter has its own place at the end of the page, with preferences the visitor chooses.

TODAY

Title, price, a paragraph, a grey button. Nothing explains what the jar is or how to use it.

No reviews, no reassurance, no link to anything else on the site.

PROPOSED

A proper stage. Tilt the photo, flick through the real gallery, see the lot number and verify it.

Everything a careful buyer asks: ingredient chips that link to the science, a live same-day dispatch countdown, subscribe and save, a wishlist heart.

Further down: reviews with a breakdown, the guides that mention this product, and the FAQ answers about it.

The shop

TODAY

145 products, 16 per page, one sort menu. No way to narrow by skin concern or ingredient.

PROPOSED

Filters that match how people think: skincare categories, professional categories, concern, ingredient, plus instant search.

Add to bag from the grid. The bag opens as a drawer with real thumbnails and a free-shipping meter.

How much the home page says

Both pages, top to bottom, at the same scale. The current page is one screen of category tiles. The proposed page tells the story of the brand, then lets the visitor shop.

TODAY

Banner, search, 16 category tiles, a second search box, a subscribe form, footer.

PROPOSED

The drop, the facts, the night routine, your personal shelf, the edit, concerns, guides, the look, the standard, FAQ, journal, the Circle, clinics, the Monthly Drop.

Seven things the new site does that the current one cannot

Each one is built and working in the preview.

A shelf that remembers you

After the 60-second skin quiz, the home page greets the visitor by time of day and shows products picked for their concern. It also remembers what they looked at last time.

Six guides, written to be followed

From the first GHK-Cu dilution to a clinic's exosome aftercare sheet. Every step links the product it means, so reading turns into buying.

Answers before the email arrives

Shipping, authenticity, cold chain, how to use the strong stuff. Each answer links to its guide or product. Google can read it too.

The Depris Circle

Your real verified reviews, member rituals with the products tagged, upcoming lives, a clinic corner, and a form to share your own ritual.

Reviews on every product

A star breakdown, filters by skin type, a write-a-review form. Where there are none yet, it says so plainly and invites the first one.

The Monthly Drop

One letter a month. Visitors pick what they want, skincare rituals, clinic notes or offers, and see the latest issue before they sign up.

Everything connects

Products link to guides, guides link to products, FAQ answers link to both, and the community tags the products it talks about. A visitor is never at a dead end.

Your brand, made bigger

Colours taken from the real logo, petal details drawn from its lotus, and women with real skin on the first screen. It looks like one brand from the first screen to the footer.

What changed after the first review

The first draft led with the serum. The feedback was fair: people buy skin, not bottles.

Three things moved.

FIRST DRAFT

The bottle as hero. Handsome, but it talks about the product before the person.

NOW

Six women, 33 to 42. East Asian, Middle Eastern, Latina, Black, Irish, Scandinavian, in the same soft pastel style as the portraits on the current site. Each one speaks for a concern and links to its shelf. Rotates slowly, pauses when you touch it.

FIRST DRAFT

Concerns as coloured tiles. Pretty, but abstract.

NOW

Concerns as people. Leila for glow, Mira for fine lines, Fiona for redness. The photo does the explaining.

Petal-shaped photos. Clever, but the shapes fought the pictures.

NOW

One lead story, three rows. Straight photos, a card that overlaps the lead image, more room to read.

The portraits are generated campaign previews and are labelled as such on the site. They show the casting direction; the real campaign would be photographed.

The numbers

Measured on 9 October 2026 with the same browser. Lower is better on all three.

Data downloaded to show the home page

Less data means the page appears sooner on a phone signal, and Google treats faster pages more kindly.

Scripts the browser has to run

Each plugin on a WordPress site adds its own scripts. They slow the page and sometimes fight each other.

Separate requests to load the home page

Fewer round trips, fewer things that can stall.

Two smaller things search engines notice

The current home page has no main headline for Google to read, and it loads five different typeface families. The proposed page has one clear headline and three faces chosen to match the logo.

Figures are what one browser downloaded and ran for the home page on that day. The current product page was heavier still, at about 15 MB and 134 scripts. Load times are not compared because the preview ran on a local machine, which would flatter it unfairly.

Why rebuild rather than patch the WordPress theme

A fair question. Here is the honest answer.

IF WE PATCH THE CURRENT THEME	IF WE REBUILD ON A MODERN FRONT END
The 114 plugin scripts stay. Every plugin update can break another one, and the page stays heavy.	24 scripts, all ours. Nothing third-party fights for the page. Updates are ours to control.
Personalisation, guides and the community would be bolted on with more plugins, each with its own look.	They are designed in from the start and share one visual language.
Design is limited to what the theme builder allows.	The design is whatever the brand needs. Everything in this document is proof of that.
Hosting, caching and speed depend on the WordPress host.	Pages are pre-built and served from a global edge network. Fast everywhere, including on a phone in a car park.
WooCommerce stays as the store.	WooCommerce stays as the store. Products, orders, customers and payments do not move. Only the shop window changes.

In plain terms: the kitchen stays, the dining room is rebuilt. Your team keeps managing products and orders exactly as today.

How the new site feeds the rest of the business

A website is not an end in itself. Each piece below was built to do a job beyond looking good.

WHAT IT DOES	BUILT IN
Brings new customers in from search	Six guides and ten FAQ answers written around the questions people type into Google: how to use GHK-Cu, exosomes after microneedling, tinted SPF for dark spots. Structured data so Google can show the answers directly. One clear headline per page, fast load times, clean addresses.
Turns a visit into a sale	The product is explained before the price is asked. Reviews, a dispatch countdown, ingredient links and the quiz all sit on the product page. The bag opens as a drawer with a free-shipping meter and suggested pairings.
Brings customers back	The Monthly Drop newsletter with preferences from day one. A shelf that remembers each visitor's concern and recent products. Subscribe-and-save on the products people reorder.
Builds trust	Authorized retailer, Korean sourcing and Wyoming stock stated on the first screen. Lot verification for every bottle. Real reviews surfaced instead of buried.
Earns referrals	The Depris Circle gives customers a place to share their ritual and be featured. Every guide, product and ritual is easy to send to a friend.
Serves clinics as their own customer	A professional entry point, a clinic corner, protocol guides and a path to a trade account with volume pricing.
Plugs into marketing	Ready for your email platform, analytics and ad pixels from the first week, with the events that matter already named: quiz finished, guide read, added to bag, subscribed.

What this means for the business

In plain terms, and without inventing numbers.

CHANGE	WHY IT SHOULD MATTER
Product first, trust first	A visitor who understands what GHK-Cu is, and believes it is genuine, is far closer to buying than one looking at a logo.
Lighter pages	Fewer people give up while a phone page loads. Faster pages also help search ranking.
Guides and FAQ	Fewer "how do I use this" emails, and more confident first purchases of the strong products.
Reviews everywhere	Your four real reviews are currently hard to find. On the new site they are on the home page, the Circle and the products.
The Monthly Drop	A reason to come back each month, and a list you own, segmented by interest from day one.
A clinic corner	Professionals are a different customer. They get their own entry point, their own guides and a pro account path.
A shelf that remembers	Returning visitors see their concern and their recent products first. It feels like a shop that knows them.

What is real and what is a preview

We would rather you know exactly which parts are wired and which are showing the idea.

PART	STATUS	NOTE
Products, prices, photos, categories	Real	From your WooCommerce store.
Verified customer reviews	Real	The four on the store today, linked back to it.
Facts: authorized retailer, Wyoming dispatch, 3pm cutoff, 145+ products	Real	Taken from your site and store.
Checkout	Preview	The bag works. Payment would route to WooCommerce or Shopify at build.
Sample reviews, member rituals, newsletter issues	Preview	Written to show the experience. Each one is visibly tagged "Sample".
Review, ritual and newsletter forms	Preview	They work on the page and say which system they connect to at build.
Lot verification and certificates	Preview	Shows how a lot code lookup would read. Needs your batch records.
Campaign portraits, journal and guide imagery	Preview	Generated for the concept and labelled on the site. They set the casting and lighting direction for a real shoot.
Quality check	Done	All 49 pages tested at phone, tablet, laptop and desktop widths with no errors, no sideways scrolling, one headline per page and finger-sized links.

Every page, as it stands today

So nothing in this proposal is left to the imagination. Desktop first, then the same site on a phone.

How we would get there

Three steps. Each one leaves you with something you can use.

STEP ONE · WEEKS 1 TO 3

Foundations

- Import all 145 products and keep them in sync with WooCommerce
- Connect checkout and payments (Afterpay and Klarna stay)
- Put the preview on a real address for the team to test

STEP TWO · WEEKS 4 TO 6

Content and email

- A campaign shoot for the six faces, plus journal and guide photography
- Connect the Monthly Drop to your email platform
- Review the guide and FAQ copy with you

STEP THREE · WEEKS 7 TO 9

Community and launch

- Sync reviews both ways with the store
- Moderated ritual submissions and the clinic account path
- Redirects from every old address, then switch over

Working with us

What you can expect if you say yes.

- 1 You already know how we work. This proposal was built the same way the real site would be: show, check with you, adjust, show again.
- 2 Nothing is hidden. Every number in this document was measured, every sample is labelled, every form says what it connects to.
- 3 You see progress every week on a live address, on a laptop and on a phone, not in a slide deck.
- 4 Your team keeps using WooCommerce for products and orders. We handle the design, the build, the content set-up and the switch-over, including redirects from every old page.
- 5 After launch we stay on for the first month to watch the numbers, fix what needs fixing and hand over the guide to running it.

Next step

Next step: a 30-minute walkthrough

We click through the preview together on a laptop and a phone, answer anything in this document, and agree what step one should include. If it is a yes, we can start the week after.

The design is also in Figma, with the colour and type foundations, the home page sections, every phone screen and the key desktop screens: figma.com/design/Ig5pfQBsohjQVY8hsMxWbq
